CONSTITUTIONAL RULES.

As it is necessary that all societies or Preamble. combinations of men for laudable purposes, should be regulated by certain fixed rules and principles, so it is proper those rules should be made public both for the benefit of their own members and the information and satisfaction of all concerned. The rules for governing the church of God are contained in the holy Scriptures of Truth, and as far as they concern the essential and most important interests of that holy Society they are full and particular. To these no man may add, nor from them diminish. But a number of duties and transactions which relate to its temporal and outward concerns appear to be comprehended in general directions, particularly in that "Let all things be done decently and in order." In the application of this general rule sundry explanations, and mutual agreements among the members of the Christian Church are necessary.

The Incorporated Baptist Church in Charleston, impressed with these considerations, have agreed to the following rules and regulations to be observed by them.

RULE I.

Style. The Style of this Church shall be "The Incorporated Baptist Church in Charleston."

RULE II.

Church to consist of members of the church and members of the corporation. This church shall consist of such persons as are regularly admitted members according to the principles contained in the confession of faith and system of discipline adhered to by the Charleston Association, and of those who associate with them for the purposes of religious worship, in the manner hereinafter to be described. The exercise of discipline as it respects the admission and dismissal of members ; the infliction or removal of censures, and the calling to office, except as hereafter limited, together with whatever may be properly defined the purely spiritual concerns of the church, shall be conducted exclusively by those who are regular male members of full age, and communicants at the Lord's Table. The other concerns of the church shall be decided by the united voice of the members and supporters, regularly convened as a corporate Body; and these different classes shall be distinguished by the respective denominations of members of the church and members of the corporation.

RULE III.

The independency, and congregational form of government shall be inviolably preserved in this church. But its friendly correspondence and union with its sister churches in association shall be kept up on principles of reciprocal advantage and christian love: and on these principles respect will be paid to their advice, and reasonable contributions made to the interests of the union.

The congregational form of government shall be preserved.

RULE IV.

Any person disposed to become a member of this church (unless already baptized and recommended by letter) must make known his intention to the pastor thereof, and being introduced to the church, privately convened for that purpose, must relate either verbally or in writing the reason of his hope, and give such answers to questions respecting his christian knowledge, repentance and faith as may afford consistent and rational evidence of a gracious state. After which satisfac-trations, and to interment in the burial ground: yet it is always to be understood, that the privileges herein allowed to the families of members of the corporation, and of pew-holders, are not to be extended to sons after they have arrived at full age, nor to daughters after marriage, unless they make the regular contribution to the support of the church, or become members of the congregation in the manner specified in the former part of this rule.
